AN EVENING WITH

Lady Churchill's Rosebud Wristlet

Readings—and Perhaps More—from the pages of Lady Churchill's Rosebud Wristlet featuring:

Hannah Wolf Bowen: a Philosophy major, an assistant editor for the Fortean Bureau, and the person of an ungrateful (yet adorable) horse and a neurotic (yet adorable) dog. Some of her stories have found homes. Others have not. These things happen.

John Trey attempts to exploit whatever meager talents he possesses from an old house in a suburb in the Midwest, where he keeps all brooms locked safely in a closet. When not writing, reading, or critiquing, he often can be found playing with his daughter, listening to jazz, or pondering the mysteries of invisibility.

Dave Schwartz's "The Ichthyancer Writes His Friend with an Account of the Yeti's Birthday Party", was the lead story in LCRW 13. Schwartz is the reincarnation of a famous dancing bear who once entertained thousands of Bolivian mine workers. He is indigenous to the Midwestern United States, and traces of his spoor have appeared in On Spec and Flashquake.org. He prefers tea, thank you. He appears on the edge of publishing a zine: The Dogtown Review.

Philip Brewer is an Esperanto user, and, while he uses that to communicate with peoples all over the world, we expect he will read something in English. (At least at first.)

Gavin J. Grant and Kelly Link (Stranger Things Happen) publish their zine, Lady Churchill's Rosebud Wristlet twice a year and also run Small Beer Press (www.lcrw.net). They read an awful lot (Kelly quickly, Gavin not so) and write somewhat less so. They've driven here from Northampton, MA—the roundabout way: New Mexico to Iowa City to Madison, WI—where they live in an old farmhouse and never quite keep up with the gardening.
